

A black dog, not real, but more than just a notion, A symbol of hope for those struggling in motion, His presence, a comfort, in times of despair, A reminder that hope can always be found somewhere.

In darkness and sorrow, it seems hard to cope, But the black dog reminds us that there is still hope, Through struggles and strife, he stands by our side, A beacon of light in the depths of the night.

He doesn't judge, nor does he criticize, He listens, he comforts, as our tears he dries, A source of strength, in the face of fear, A symbol of hope, to help us persevere.

For those who are lost, in the depths of their pain, this black dog is there, to guide them again, To show them the way, to a brighter tomorrow, To help them find hope, in a world full of sorrow.

So let us embrace, this symbol of hope, And remember his presence, when we feel we can't cope, For the black dog may not be real, in a literal sense, But it symbolizes hope, and that makes all the difference.
